Two American Soldiers Die, Eight Wounded at Nogales, Ariz.

MISTOOK CARRANZA FORCE FOR VILLISTAS

NOGALES, Arts., Nov. 26 .- At least twenty Mexican troopers were killed in Nogales, Mexico, shortly after noon today by the fire of American troops. Two American soldiers were killed and eight

Whether the dead are Villistas or Car-Panzistas is not known, but they are believed to have been Carranzistas. The American troops thought they were Villistas at the time of firing. Following the evacuation of Nogales, Sonora, this orning by the Villa forces some stragglers from the Villa army remained in the main town drinking, looting and shooting their rifles at intervals. About noon bullets began to fell on the American side of the line and an American trooper was wounded. The American soldiers, on orders of their commander, Col. W. H. Sage, Twelfth Infanty, returned the fire and six Mexi-cans were seen to fall.

For a time there was a rapid ex-hange of shots from each side of the ne. The Americans believed they were shooting at Villista stragglers, but it is believed the builets came from Carran-sista soldiers, who were just beginning to enter the evacuated town. The Car-

Throughout the morning, for some bours before the actual exchange of fire over the line, stragglers left behind in the Sonora town by the retreating Villa army had been firing at intervals into Arizona, and Col. Sage had every reason to believe when builets began to fail in wolleys that it was deliberately done by these men.

Messenger Shot Down.

During the firing the Americans saw a band of mounted horsemen dashing down the principal street of the Mexican town and mistook them for reenforcements for the supposed Villistas. Out of this command a messenger rode to the American line to take word that the Carransistas had arrived and were occupying the place. He was shot from his horse by the American fire.

Col. Cardenas, commanding the advance guard of the Carranza forces, soon had a conference on the international boundary with Col. Sage and assured him that the Carranzistas could control the situation in the Sonora town.
